

2017 Michigan State University
Symposium on Multicultural Psychology
Chinese Psychology: Current Theories and Models in Understanding 1.4 Billion People

April 14 -15, 2017

Kellogg Hotel & Conference Center, Michigan State University
East Lansing, Michigan

The 2017 MSU Symposium on Multicultural Psychology will focus on “Chinese Psychology: Current Theories and Models in Understanding 1.4 Billion People.” This conference is part of the biennial MSU Symposium on Multicultural Psychology at Michigan State University. The four main rationales for organizing the 2017 MSU Symposium are (a) importance of globalization and international competencies, (b) increasing global importance of China, (c) rapid increase in numbers of Chinese students in U.S. colleges and universities, and (d) adjustment experiences and challenges of these Chinese college students. At MSU alone, the number of Chinese students has increased exponentially over the past decade.

Registration begins at 2:30 p.m. Friday, April 14 and the symposium concludes at 6:00 p.m. Saturday, April 15.

Hosted by

Consortium for Multicultural Psychology Research in the Department of Psychology, and the Asian Studies Center,

Speakers:

- Jiing-Lih Farh, Hong Kong University of Science and Technology
- Ying-Yi Hong, Chinese University of Hong Kong
- Michelle Yik, Hong Kong University of Science and Technology
- Weiqiao Fan, Shanghai Normal University
- Xiao-Ping Chen, University of Washington
- Xinyin Chen, University of Pennsylvania
- Desiree Qin, MSU Human Development and Family Studies
- Frederick Leong, MSU Department of Psychology

Registration deadline is March 31, 2017.

The registration form can be downloaded at http://psychology.msu.edu/CMPR/msu\_symposium.aspx

Questions regarding the Symposium may be directed to the CMPR Director, Frederick Leong, Ph.D. (fleong@msu.edu).

Co-Sponsored by these MSU units:

Asian Studies Center

Graduate School

Department of Psychology

International Business Center

Office of Inclusion and Intercultural Initiatives